Biogeography and Ecology of New Guinea J.L. Gressitt, 2012-12-06 J L Gressitt New Guinea is a fantastic island unique and fascinating It is an area of incredible variety of geomorphology biota peoples languages history traditions and cultures Diversity is its prime characteristic whatever the subject of interest To a biogeographer it is tantalizing as well as confusing or frustrating when trying to determine the history of its biota To an ecologist and to all biologists it is a happy hunting ground of endless surprises and unanswered questions To a conservationist it is like a dream come true a flash back of a few centuries as well as a challenge for the future New Guinea is so special that it is hard to compare it with other islands or tropical areas It is something apart with its very complicated history chapters I 2 4 II 1 4 III I VI I 2 It is partly old but to a great extent very young yet extremely rich and complex It has biota of different sources to such a degree that it is still disputed in this volume as to what Realm it belongs to the Paleotropical or Notogaeon Australian or what Region Oriental Oceanic Papuan or Australian The terms Papuasian Indo Australian and Australasian also have been applied to the area

Intestinal Absorptive Surface in Mammals of Different Sizes Robert L. Snipes, 2012-12-06 1 1 Scientific Aims In recent years there has been a definite trend away from the casuistic scientific thinking which has dominated the scientific world at least in the field of medicobiological research Now in the last decade of this century scientists are returning to a conceptual way of thinking that characterized the beginning of this century namely organismal thinking The holistic concept is not a new one it was rekindled by a small group of scientists who in the previous two decades have begun to warn against too great an emphasis being placed on a molecular casuistic approach as the final pursuit to science see Duncker 1983 These thinkers were perhaps instrumental in helping to turn the tide to instruct and encourage fellow researchers to extend their findings from the molecular and to the organismal see Duncker 1983 1992a b Duncker and Kreite 1987 Having observed the ceca of many different animals for many years and having described their morphology at different levels of study from the macroscopic to the electron microscopy level the need to compare and observe these morphological entities in a quantitative way became increasingly imminent Quantitative methodology in morphology requires the use of morphometry which in the most general terms can be described as the measurement of the forms of animals As defined by Reith and Meyhew 1988 it is quantitative morphology i e the measurement of structures by any method including stereology

Terrestrial Ecosystems Through Time Anna K. Behrensmeyer, 1992-08-15 Breathtaking in scope this is the first survey of the entire ecological history of life on land from the earliest traces of terrestrial organisms over 400 million years ago to the beginning of human agriculture By providing myriad insights into the unique ecological information contained in the fossil record it establishes a new and ambitious basis for the study of evolutionary paleoecology of land ecosystems A joint undertaking of the Evolution of Terrestrial Ecosystems Consortium at the National Museum of Natural History Smithsonian Institution and twenty six additional researchers this book begins with four chapters that lay out the theoretical background and methodology of the science of evolutionary paleoecology Included are a comprehensive review of the taphonomy and paleoenvironmental settings of fossil deposits as well as guidelines for developing ecological characterizations of extinct organisms and the communities in which they lived The remaining three chapters treat the history of terrestrial ecosystems through geological time emphasizing how ecological interactions have changed the rate and tempo of ecosystem change the role of exogenous forcing factors in generating ecological change and the effect of ecological factors on the evolution of biological diversity The six principal authors of this volume are all associated with the Evolution of Terrestrial Ecosystems program at the National Museum of Natural History Smithsonian Institution

Ecology and Evolution of Plant-Herbivore Interactions on Islands Xoaquín Moreira,Luis Abdala-Roberts,2024-01-03 Theory and early empirical work posed that herbivore pressure should be lower on islands than on the mainland owing to lower herbivore abundance and diversity in insular systems Consequently plant taxa found on islands are expected to be less protected or even to have lost their defences completely While early observational studies supported the prediction of lower herbivory and plant defences on islands recent island mainland comparisons have yielded mixed results with some studies finding no differences between islands and mainlands or surprisingly higher herbivory and plant defences on islands In this book the authors aim to re assess current theory and initiate a new generation of work on insularity effects on plant herbivore interactions This book aims to fill the research gaps by integrating the research that has been done to date and by compiling and summarising new research on insularity effects on plant herbivore interactions It provides a critical examination of the patterns in light of classical theory and identifies potential mechanisms or underlying processes It also aims to raise new questions that will form the basis for a revised and more robust research programme
